

FOR THE FAIR SEX.

The Old-Fashioned Girl.

A writer in the Standard of Chronicle says that two classes of girls may appear in the "old-fashioned girl." He can know such girls, and sketches a portrait of one of them as follows:

She was about thirty or forty years ago. She was a little girl until she was fifteen.

She used to help her mother wash the dishes, and keep the kitchen tidy, and she had an ambition to make pies so nicely that no one could tell the difference between them.

She used to fry gridiron-cakes at ten years of age, and darn her own stockings before she was twelve, to say nothing of knitting them herself.

She was a girl of play, and enjoyed herself to the fullest extent.

She had very costly toys, to be sure, but her rag doll and little bureaus and chair glass. Uncle Tom made were just as valuable to her as any doll.

She had a fine collection of dolls and elegant furniture that children have nowadays.

She never said, "I can't," "I don't want to," to her mother, when asked to leave her play and run up stairs or down on account of the house had not been brought in that way.

Obedience was a cardinal virtue in the old-fashioned little girl.

We do not suppose that her hair in curlers, and her fine pins, or had it "banged" over her forehead, and her flounces were no trouble to her.

She learned to sew by making patches, and we dare say she was an over-and-over seam as well as nine-tenths of the grown-up women do nowadays.

The old-fashioned little girl did not grow into a young lady and remain a child, but she was a good teen, and she did not read dime-novels, and was not fancying a hero in every plowboy she met.

She learned the solid accomplishments of the girl in. She was taught the art of cooking, and housekeeping.

When she got a husband she knew how to cook him a dinner.

She was not learned in French verbs or Latin declensions, but she knew how to repeat the saying of hearing her mother out: "The Maiden's Prayer" and "Silver Threads Among the Gold" twenty times a day the piano.

But we have no doubt she made her family quite as comfortable as the modern young lady does hers.

It may be a vulgar assertion, but we honestly believe that she comes to keep us in a happy a good cook and housekeeper is to be greatly preferred above an accomplished scholar.

When both sets of qualities are found together, as they sometimes are then is the best evidence which such a woman has control blessed.

The old-fashioned little girl was modest in her demeanor, and she never talked of or used any word of profanity.

She did not laugh at old people or make fun of cripples, as we saw some modern little girls doing the other day.

She had respect for elders, and was not above going to the aid of a friend from time to time.

She did not think she knew as much as her mother, and thus her judgment was as good as her grandmother's.
